Hempstead, N.Y. (CBS.MW) à € "The US $ 50 barrel, oil definitely affect the US economy. The question is: how can and what can be done in this regard? Let's get the last part first. The petroleum prices rose due to a "perfect storm." Demand shot, supplies did not remain à € "and a heavy fear of fear entered the market, adding up to 15 dollars the barrel to the gross preglations. The demand has been powered by the strongest global economic growth of a generation. The international monetary background estimates that global gross domestic product is growing in even 5% this year à € "the faster rate in almost three days. Motivating this increase in demand is the US and China - the two world potentials of economic growth. While these growth rates continue, the search for oil will continue to remain at historical levels. On the side of the offer, there are available capacity in the system. The unused OPEC capacity today decreased to about 1.5 million barrels a day, ten times more than in the 80's. There are no more capacity in another place. place. It is ³ obvious that in the short term nothing can be done to change this supply-demand equation. Even hitting the government's strategic reserve will not do much to lower prices. When it comes to the supreme fear, things are not different. fact, we're not talking about trying to make the tax physically, like bringing additional ³ to the market overnight, or using ³ more efficiently. But the solution of the political problems that increased oil ³ prices is almost difficult. For example, what are the chances that you µ suddenly decrease them in Iraq, Nigeria, Venezuela and even Saudi Arabia? What about Yukos, Russia's largest oil company, which had to cut shipments to China? And don't forget about the weakening of the ³ in the last two years ³ that also increased oil prices Notwithstanding the experts, nothing can be done about these factors à at least in the short term. So the ³ oil is here to stay. As for its impact on the economy, this falls directly on the shoulders of the Federal Reserve. Thirty years ago, following the first oil price shock, the Fed at that time decided to increase its cash supply to alleviate the impact of the quadrupling of oil ³ on the US economy. The result was our first wave of two-digit inflation since ³ Second World War. This time, the Fed is acting differently. Instead of boosting monetary growth, it is reducing it as part of the process of rowing political accommodation at a "measured pace". This explains why the overall inflation rate has moderated since the second quarter, even when oil ³ prices hit the moon. But that also doesn't show why the economy is slowing down.
